

Contributors to Volume 41, Number 3

Lawrence M. Baldwin is Senior Research Specialist, Department of Information Technology, Wellesley College, Wellesley, MA 02181. Trained as a developmental psychologist, he has taught courses in psychology and computer science. He has carried out cross-cultural research on kinship terminology and collaborated for five years with Michel Grimaud on the history and incidence of street names.

W. F. H. Nicolaisen, Distinguished Professor Emeritus of English, State University of New York at Binghamton, is Honorary Research Fellow, Department of English, University of Aberdeen AB9 2UB, Scotland. He is a past president of the American Name Society and is currently Secretary-General of the International Committee of Onomastic Sciences.

J. Timmons Roberts teaches in the Department of Sociology at Tulane University, New Orleans, LA 70118. His research interests are in political economy, Latin America, and sociology of the environment. His onomastic interest grew from working with Paul Leslie of Greensboro College; it now includes comparative research on real estate developments in the United States.

Hassell Simpson, an amateur actor and student of theater, is professor of English at Hampden-Sydney College, Hampden-Sydney, VA 23943, where he teaches courses in modern fiction and modern drama. He is the author of a critical study, Rumor Godden, and shorter pieces. This is his first essay in onomastics.

Charlotte Templin is Professor of English and Chair of the English Department at the University of Indianapolis, IN 46227. Her interests include literary onomastics, feminist analysis of women writers, and the study of literary reception and reputation. She has published interviews with contemporary women writers and articles on Margaret Atwood, Anne Tyler, Marietta Holley, among others. A book entitled Feminism and the Politics of Literary Reputation: The Example of Erica Jong is forthcoming.