

Contributors to Volume 43, No. 2

Harold E. Gulley, Assistant Professor of Geography at the University of Wisconsin, Oshkosh, WI 54901-8642, has published a number of articles on the Southern cultural landscape, especially the toponyms of the region.

Jossi Katz is in the Geography Department of Bar-Ilan University, Ramat-Gan, 52900 Israel. He specializes in the historical geography of Palestine in the contemporary era and the history of Jewish settlement. He is the author of The "Business" of Settlement — Private Entrepreneurship in the Jewish Settlement of Palestine, 1900-1914 and he currently serves as Vice-President of the Israeli Geographical Association.

Christian Moraru teaches in the Comparative Literature Department at Indiana University, Bloomington, 47405-6601. He is mainly interested in poetics, postmodern ideology, theories of reading and contemporary American fiction. He has published a book on mimesis in classical aesthetics and articles on postmodern fiction. An article on Henry James and René Girard is forthcoming in Studies in the Humanities.

Eric P. Hamp is in the Department of Linguistics at the University of Chicago, 60637. His areas of interest are in names, Celtic languages, and historical linguistics.