

Contributors to Volume 45, Number 2

Barbara Bosch is Head of the Department of Afrikaans and Netherlandic Studies at Rhodes University, Grahamstown 6140, South Africa. She researches in the areas of language planning, naming practices, language attitudes, and minority languages. She is editor of the South African Journal of Linguistics. akab @warthog.ru.ac.za

Claudia Bryant recently graduated from Appalachian State University and plans to work toward a doctoral degree. Her research interests include the influences of race and gender on policy outcomes within the American political system.

Vivian de Klerk is Head of the Department of Linguistics and English Language at Rhodes University, P.O. Box 94, Grahamstown 6140, South Africa. Her areas of interest are personal naming practices, language attitudes and language shift. She is editor of the South African Journal of Applied Language Studies. livd@ warthog.ru.ac.za

†James K. Skipper, Jr. was professor of Sociology at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. A distinguished scholar, his published works include books and articles in the areas of medical sociology, deviant behavior, work and occupations, and popular culture, as well as onomastics. He co-edited the special issue of Names (December, 1990) devoted to personal nicknames.

Barbara H. Zaitzow is an assistant professor in the department of political science and criminal justice at Appalachian State University, Boone, NC 28608. She is currently working with state officials on assessing gang activity in prisons and assisting local and state officials with increasing the use of intermediate sanctions as an alternative to imprisonment. Her research interests include female criminality, corrections, and alternatives to incarceration. zaitzowbh@conrad.appstate.edu