

Contributors to Volume 54, Number 2

Scott Baird received his Ph.D. from University of Texas – Austin in 1969. He has taught at Kyushu Gakuin High School, Kumamoto, Japan (1961-1964), Japan Lutheran College/Seminary (1971-74), and Trinity University – San Antonio 1974-present. He is a member of American Name Society, Linguistics Society of America, American Dialect Society, American Culture Association, Association for Gravestone Studies. He has published extensively (books, monographs, book chapters, essays, newspaper columns) in applied linguistics. He loves athletics and music.

J. Joseph Edgette, Ph.D., Professor of Education and Resident Folklorist at Widener University, Chester, Pennsylvania, received his doctorate in folklore from the University of Pennsylvania. Teacher, scholar, and public lecturer, currently, he chairs the Cemeteries and Gravemarkers Area of the American Culture Association as well as serving on the editorial board of their Journal. He is Secretary of the Board of Trustees of the Association for Gravestone Studies and serves on the Board of the Friends of Woodlawn cemetery, Bronx, New York. He is very active in the American Folklore Society. In addition to 25 years devoted to the study of cemeteries and gravemarkers, he has spent the last seven years researching many of the aspects pertaining to the R.M.S. Titanic. He is also a member of several Titanic societies that are research oriented.

Susan Olsen is the Executive Director of the Friends of the Woodlawn Cemetery. Ms. Olsen currently serves on the Board of Directors of the Association of Gravestone Studies and is active in the Cemeteries and Gravemarkers Section of the American Culture Association. Her most recent article detailing the history of a monument at The Woodlawn Cemetery appeared in Francis Lieber and the Culture of the Mind, 2005. University of South Carolina Press.

Cornelia C. Paraskevas was born in Athens, Greece, where she completed a B.A. in English/Linguistics at the University of Athens (1980). She completed an M.A. in Linguistics at the University of Kansas (1982) with the help of a Fulbright Scholarship; she completed her Ph.D. in Linguistics at the University of Kansas (1987). She has been teaching linguistics and composition theory at Western Oregon University. Her research interests include language and Greek immigrants to the United States; stylistic analysis; grammar/writing contact zones. Her prior publications include the book Conversations about Writing (2004); "The Craft of Writing: Breaking Conventions" (English Journal 2004); "Negotiating Languages, Negotiating Forms: the experience of Greek immigrants to the United States" (Studies in Greek Linguistics 1998).

Richard A. Sauers is president of Lenape Investment Corporation and editor of Global Markets newsletter. He received a B.S. in Chemistry from Delaware Valley College, Doylestown, Pennsylvania, and completed some graduate work at Rutgers University, New Brunswick, New Jersey. He is a member of the Cemeteries and Gravemarkers Area of the American Culture Association, and a member of the Board of Trustees of the Association for Gravestone Studies and is editor-in-chief of its AGS Quarterly. His research interests include the study of corporate and stock exchange histories, and financial panics and market crashes, and he has applied that work to the interpretative education programs of Laurel Hill Cemetery, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and Woodlawn Cemetery, Bronx, New York.

Fred Tarpley, professor emeritus at Literature and Languages at Texas A&M University–Commerce, is a past president of the American Name Society and a past director of the Place Name Survey of the United States. He directed the South Central Names Institute in Commerce for 15 years. His books include 1001 Texas Place Names and Place Names of Northeast Texas. He is currently completing a comprehensive dictionary of Texas placenames. For the past two decades, he and Scott Baird have coordinated a booth at the Texas Folklife Festival in San Antonio, providing origins of family names. All aspects of onomastics interest him.